61		580398, 831009	Drumahaire	Old Hall	This is a hall-castle, possibly of 13th-century date, which was known as O'Rourke's Hall. The surviving remains are a single-storey rectangular structure built of mortared limestone walls, the stone of which is probably derived from quarries immediately adjacent to the SE and NW. The walls are ivy-covered but there were four round-headed window embrasures in each long wall as illustrated by Grose, all of which are now robbed-out. There is a destroyed doorway at the S end of the NW wall, which is approached from the SW by an unexcavated shelf of rock, and this is probably the original entrance. A destroyed doorway with two steps down inside it at the E end of the NE wall might be an inserted feature.
